Change tops Town Hall agenda

David Moore
Editor

As the date of Oct. 1 approaches for full operations of Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst, Army leaders highlighted the challenges of transition and executing operations during a post Town Hall Meeting held at Club Dix Sept. 8.

Col. Patrick Slowey, Fort Dix commander, said while Oct. 1 is a very important date, it is a mark that begins a year of transition for the installation. But he also reminded workers it was a time for change.

"You cannot stop time and you cannot live in the past," Slowey said.

The post commander said while other posts and bases are closing or losing missions, Fort Dix continues its mission of training and mobilization. As the Army reduces its 15 power projection platforms, the post will be one of six enduring mobilization training centers as the installation evolves into an Army Support Activity.

"It is not going to be easy ... The hardest part of this plan will be the execution."

-- Col. Patrick Slowey, Fort Dix commander

Slowey cited the task of demobilizing the Pennsylvania Army National Guard's 56th Stryker Brigade Combat Team at Fort Dix as a great accomplishment to take on the challenge of returning 4,200 Citizen Soldiers back to their home stations and civilian lives.

"We have a proud legacy over the last 92 years. We have been training and preparing the Ultimate Weapon to win on the battlefield and it remains our priority effort today and in the future," Slowey said.

He said the transition of the post does not leave the Army Support Activity as a subordinate to the joint base, but as a partner. But, he stressed, Oct. 1 serves as the benchmark to begin the execution phase of joint basing.

"It is not going to be easy ... the hardest part of this plan will be the execution," Slowey said.

After the commander's remarks, Col. Joseph M. Poth, deputy joint base commander, was introduced to the Fort Dix workers who attended the meeting.

Joint Base MDL lists federal job vacancies

Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst officials are encouraging qualified applicants to actively monitor www.usajobs.gov in order to apply through the Web site for several federal civilian job vacancies in various career fields and pay grades.

"Many of the positions will be created as a result of the ongoing joint-basing initiative, in which McGuire Air Force Base, Fort Dix, and Lakehurst Naval Air Engineering Station are merging into one installation in an effort to streamline operations and create an account with www.usajobs.gov and set up automatic notification e-mails through the Web site. Up to 10 "Search Agents" can be created through the site, each with different job-search criteria. The USAJobs "Search Agents" will automatically send notification e-mails containing direct links to new job postings on the site that match the applicant's search criteria.

All applicants will be subject to background checks and, if hired, will require security clearances to gain access to the installation.

Approximately 50 positions are also available for Air Reserve Technicians (ART), Davern said. An ART carries dual status, working as a full-time Department of Defense civil service employee while performing the same job as a reservist in an Air Force Reserve Command unit. For available ART positions, visit www.AFRCA.af.mil/library/jobs.

For more information about civilian employment opportunities at the joint base, call the Civilian Personnel Office at 754-5691 or visit www.jointbasemdl.af.mil, and click on the Joint Base MDL Civilian Employment Opportunities link for step-by-step instructions on how to subscribe to automatic job notification e-mails through the USAJobs Web site.

Navy implements Lakehurst-designed system

September 10, 2009: SAN DIEGO (NNS) — USS Peleliu (LHA 5) became the first ship in the Navy to implement the amphibious low-light surveillance system (ALLSS) recently while in port San Diego.

Peleliu's ALLSS provides for safer evolutions by allowing operational leaders more visibility of spaces on the ship and wider, zoomable views of places the old camera system covered.

"We installed 29 cameras, which can be controlled from eight stations throughout the ship," said Dan Bischoff, project leader for Naval Air Systems

Command in Lakehurst, N.J. "A combination of fixed and movable cameras with zoom capability will help cover the flight deck, well deck, waterline, hangar bay, vehicle stowage and engineering spaces."

Bischoff estimated the implementation of ALLSS from start to finish cost more than $1 million and was completed by a team effort of professionals from General Dynamics National Steel and Shipbuilding Company.

Bischoff said the bombing of the USS Cole (DDG 67) on Oct. 12, 2000, influenced the planning of ALLSS.

"Originally the ALLSS was going to be used primarily for flight deck and amphibious operations only, but the Cole incident showed the benefits of being able to remotely monitor engineering spaces," said Bischoff. "So, the designs were changed and the concept grew."

Bischoff added that the ALLSS works well with Peleliu's new green well deck and primary flight control tower's lighting, which provides for safe night vision device operations.

Another practical use of ALLSS is video surveillance, helping to assist the ship's security force.

"This system is better than the last one we had," said Master-at-Arms 1st Class (SW) Ronald Maples, security leading petty officer. "It has better clarity, detail and definition. Before, we could barely make out if someone on the pier approaching the ship was a male or female, but now we can actually tell specifically who it is."

Maples said the new system's steer-able zooming features enable the ship's security force to track "persons of interest" near the ship, which the old system's cameras could not do.

America will always remember.

In an inspiring ceremony at the Fort Dix Main Chapel Sept. 11, Installation Commander Col. Patrick Slowey and Fort Dix Chap. (Col.) Thomas Brouillard placed a wreath for victims of terrorism.

Brouillard expressed his feelings as he recalled helping victims of the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon.

"I was sitting in my cubicle the Monday of the 11th. Someone said a plane had hit the first tower and I thought it was just a small plane. I went back to work," Brouillard recalled. Then he was called to the conference room to watch events unfold on a big-screen television.

"We heard a voice say a plane had just hit the second tower and thought it was just hysteria. Then my boss called from the Pentagon and said for every chaplain to get over there, to double-time it."

The chaplains were stopped, Brouillard said, by armed personnel. He didn't know who they were, but they were let through to the crash site only after being approved.

Joint training prepares Airmen

Tech. Sgt. Paul R. Evans
U.S. Air Force Expeditionary
Center

Since the beginning of Operation Enduring Freedom, security forces Airmen have been fighting on the joint operations battlefield.

The career field has evolved from air base defense operations to missions "outside the wire" with sister services including the U.S. Army, security forces have changed exponentially. Their transformation has given birth to a focus on technology and more combat-oriented training.

To provide security forces Airmen relevant education for an ever-changing battlefield, contingency skills instructors Tech. Sgt. Shaylin Butler and Staff Sgt. Cecil Evans, from the from the U.S. Air Force Expeditionary Center's 421st Combat Training Squadron, partnered with Army Sgt. 1st Class Gary Johnson and his mobilized training team from the 3rd Training Support Battalion, 312th Regiment, Fort Meade, Md. Sergeant Johnson and his team were initially mobilized to the Fort Dix area of the joint base in order to train Soldiers to operate and care for the Blue Force Tracker, or BFT.

"Blue Force Tracker is a Global Positioning System-enabled system that provides military commanders and forces with location information about friendly and hostile military forces," Johnson said. "It provides leaders at all levels with greater situational awareness, command and control, and aids in eliminating the time required to decipher the battlefield."

Butler said he understood this type of technology is vital to security forces Airmen who have to conduct "outside the wire" missions. He then formulated a plan to bring this training to the USAF Expeditionary Center.

"When I started this project

Tech. Sgt. Paul R. Evans

BE PREPARED — Security Forces Airmen receive vital training from contingency skills instructor, Staff Sgt. Cecil Evans, in the operation of Blue Force Tracker Aug. 29 during their pre-deployment training conducted by the 421st Combat Training Squadron at the U.S. Air Force Expeditionary Center, Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst. The Blue Force Tracker is a system that gives air and ground units and their commanders a real-time picture of the battlefield.

over a year ago, I immediately solicited the assistance of Sgt. 1st Class Johnson and his staff of U.S. Army BFT Trainers," Butler said.

"Sgt. Johnson guided me through the entire process of determining the type of hardware and software to purchase, including classroom setup."

Just recently, Evans spent 30 days with Army BFT trainers learning the system. After completing this extensive training, Evans said he is eager to teach deploying security forces Airmen how to digitally communicate on today's battlefield.

"Blue Force Tracker is a phenomenal system that allows the truck commander and team leaders in a convoy operation to talk to each other and the tactical operations center in real-time,"

Evans said. "This standardized system allows us to work with our sister services and receive mission updates, situational awareness, and ultimately mission success."

Butler said this training effort is another example of the Expeditionary Center "breaking ground" by getting Airmen to teach a class not normally taught by Airmen.

"By doing this, it helps alleviate some of the demand placed on the Army by reducing the Air Force's demand for their training," Butler said.

Currently, security forces Airmen are the only ones receiving this training at the Expeditionary Center and the 421st CTS. However, there are plans on the horizon to offer this training to all Air Force personnel, regardless of specialty.

In referencing the ability to build this training in a little more than a year's time, Butler said, "Without exceptional support from the Expeditionary Center's leadership, network and facilities team, and especially Sgt. Johnson and his team, this class wouldn't be happening today."

Butler said there are countless man-hours invested in this training, but the effort is well worth it.

Both Butler and Johnson believe their greatest contribution is having the privilege to give the warfighter quality training and easing the stress of knowing who's out there.

"It's about seeing the students get reunited with their families because of effective and relevant training," Johnson said.

Chairman of Joint Chiefs answers questions at virtual meeting

Samantha L. Quigley
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14, 2009 — An endeavor that began about a month ago comes to fruition today with the airing of the first virtual town hall meeting in which the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff answers questions posed online by servicemembers and the public.

Navy Adm. Mike Mullen fielded four questions from servicemembers and other parties interested in military issues during the "Ask the Chairman" event. The questions were submitted online via YouTube, Facebook and Twitter, with the goal of providing people a forum to ask questions or offer insights and get direct feedback.

"I actually look forward ... to be able to answer questions from around the world," Mullen told the Pentagon Channel's host of the program, Navy Petty Officer 2nd Class Andrew Krauss. "It's an opportunity to connect in a way that I haven't had before, so I'm excited about it."

Mullen's first question, a YouTube submission, came from an Army captain with two Iraq tours under his belt. He wondered if lessons learned in Iraq were being applied in Afghanistan.

"As we shift our main effort from Iraq to Afghanistan, which we're doing right now, we have to be careful about the lessons that we apply. Clearly the counterinsurgency lessons do apply," Mullen said. "We need to be in Afghanistan in what I call the clear, hold, and build [posture]."

The Afghanistan campaign is different from that in Iraq, though, Mullen said. "We need very much to focus on the people," he added. "We ... have to be patient, get to know the people. It's going to take some time."

It's also crucial for the Defense Department to work with its civilian counterparts in the State Department, as well as other U.S. departments and agencies and those around the world, Mullen said.

Another YouTube question may offer an answer to getting to know the Afghan people better. From Arizona State University, the Consortium for Strategic Communications is working in communications, political science, and religious studies to achieve a greater understanding of Middle East cultures. The interdisciplinary scholars wanted to know how to make their research useable for those on the ground in Afghanistan.

Mullen said he was intrigued by the implications of the group's question, but told them he needed more information before he answers.

"The question for me would be how I might best be able to connect with you in that regard, with where you are in terms of what you're learning, and how I could then put that into curriculum and connect you with both instructors and men and women in uniform who could use that," he said. "The communication piece, the cultural adaption piece, the listening ... the seeing the challenges through other peoples' eyes — absolutely vital, and I think you could bring a lot with respect to that."

The other two questions for the chairman had to do with the H1N1 flu vaccination and a homeowner's assistance program.

The first came from an Army staff sergeant in Germany interested in whether the new H1N1 flu vaccine would be mandatory for servicemembers. Mullen said it would be, and that he anticipates the vaccine being available in about a month for servicemembers and their families. "There are a awful lot of indicators this year that this will be a very intense flu season [that's] longer than other flu seasons," he said.

"So it is important that everybody gets this."

The last question came from an Army specialist at Fort Bliss, Texas, who wanted to know when the rules for the military's homeowner assistance program would be published in the Federal Register. The program was announced in May, he said, but because the rules aren't available, no applications have been processed, and many military families have been affected by the delay.

"The act was passed to try to assist those who are obviously in a position to try to buy a house and look for ways to also defer or make up for some losses in a house if you're going to sell it," Mullen said. "In fact, it is law, but when you have a law like this, what happens is the Office of Management and Budget and the affected agency — in this case, it's the Department of Defense — have to work out the details of this."

"I regret that it has been delayed," Mullen added, asking for the questioner's patience. "We're trying to work our way through that, and hopefully, in the next few weeks to months, we'll have it in the Federal Register and you'll be able to take advantage of it."

The program is airing today on the Pentagon Channel as a special presentation, and more virtual town halls are anticipated.

Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates also will answer questions in the same manner, and the White House is planning a similar interactive venue for President Barack Obama to take questions directly from U.S. troops deployed in the U.S. Central Command area of responsibility.

Vehicle crashes drive off-duty fatalities

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON (AFNS), Sept. 11, 2009 — Four servicemembers died in off-duty accidents during Labor Day weekend, bringing to 93 the number killed during the summer season that kicked off Memorial Day weekend, safety officials reported.

Two Soldiers, a Sailor and an Airman died in vehicle accidents during the Labor Day weekend, which marked the unofficial end of summer that, historically, sees a spike in vehicular and recreational accidents.

Twenty fewer servicemembers died compared to last year, with Army, Navy and Marine Corps officials all reporting fewer off-duty fatalities.

But just as in 2008, car, truck and motorcycle accidents continued to take the heaviest toll across the board.

The Air Force was the only service to see an increase in off-duty fatalities between Memorial Day and Labor Day weekends, 22 compared to last year's 17.

Five of the Airmen were killed on motorcycles. Thirteen, including the one killed during the Labor Day weekend, died in four-wheeled-vehicle accidents, reported Paul Carlisle, deputy chief of the Air Force Safety Center's ground safety office.

The Army reported 40 off-duty fatalities this summer, down from 61 last year. Fifteen of the soldiers died on motorcycles, compared to 24 last year.

Jim Yonts, director of strategic communication at the Army Combat Readiness and Safety Center, said he's pleased by the decrease, but cautioned against declaring a trend.

"While we show positive results in many safety areas, we cannot allow ourselves to be seduced by positive statistics," Yonts said. "Engaged leadership, peers and families, in conjunction with soldiers taking responsibility for their own Band of Brothers and Sisters' safety, is paramount to drive down accidental off-duty losses."

The Navy reported 20 fatalities between the Memorial Day and Labor Day weekends, down from last year's 32. Marine Corps off-duty deaths also dropped, from 20 last year to 13 this year.

Six of the Sailors, including one who died Sept. 5, were killed in single-vehicle wrecks.

Two died in multiple-vehicle accidents and five on motorcycles, according to April Phillips, public affairs officer for the Naval Safety Center.

Phillips attributed the trend to the new military sportbike rider course instituted after fatal crashes among these riders spiked last year. The new instruction also requires refresher training for all motorcyclists every three years to keep their skills current.

"The increased emphasis on motorcycle safety and compliance with regulation, up and down the chain of command, has really made an impact," she said.

Last year, 115 servicemembers died in off-duty accidents between the Memorial Day weekend and Labor Day.

To reduce those statistics this year, the Army, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard launched a joint summer safety campaign before Memorial Day.

Safety chiefs emphasized the importance of everyone — servicemembers, civilians and family members alike — to make the campaign a success.

Med group rallies against flu

Capt. Pamela Paulin
87th Med. Group Public Health

Personnel from the 87th Medical Group spent 15 hours administering influenza vaccines to active-duty members at the McGuire AFB Community Center Tuesday.

Active-duty members who were unable to make the vaccine blitz at the community center can follow up with the immunization clinic.

"We've received the allotted shipment of vaccines and want to act quickly," said Lt. Col. Karen Scalfani, 87th Medical Operations Squadron commander. "Our goal is to get all active-duty personnel vaccinated by the first week of October to allow us to begin family-member vaccinations soon after."

Yearly flu vaccination begins in September – or as soon as vaccine is available – and continues throughout the flu season into December, January and beyond. While flu outbreaks can happen as early as October, the flu typically peaks early February.

The flu is a contagious respiratory illness caused by flu viruses. Flu viruses are spread from person to person when infected persons cough and/or sneeze, releasing germs into the air. People may also become infected by touching surfaces with flu viruses on them and then touching their mouth or nose. Those infected can infect others beginning one day before symptoms develop and up to one day after symptoms resolve. This means you may be able to pass the flu to someone else before you know you are sick.

Flu-like symptoms include:
• Fever greater than 100
• Headache

Carlos Cintron

TO THE POINT -- From left, Col. Brian O'Connor, 621st Contingency Response Wing commander; Col. Gina Grosso, Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst commander; and Col. Scott Smith, 305th Air Mobility Wing commander, receive flu vaccinations at the 87th Medical Group Immunizations Clinic Sept. 14. Senior Airman Lisbeth Romero, 87th Medical Operations Squadron; Staff Sgt. Kacie Whye, 87th MDOS; and Staff Sgt. Jesus Amador, 87th Aerospace Medical Squadron, administered the vaccines.

- extreme tiredness
- dry cough
- runny or stuffy nose
- muscle aches
- sore throat
- vomiting
- sometimes diarrhea

Prevention is key; the best way to prevent the flu is to get vaccinated.

Annual immunizations are mandatory for all active-duty personnel, including Guard and Reserve.

Seasonal flu vaccines will not provide protection against 2009 H1N1 influenza (sometimes called swine flu). Vaccines to prevent the 2009 H1N1 virus are not yet available; but are expected to be available by mid-October 2009.

Questions may be directed to the Public Health office at 754-9356 or the Immunizations Clinic at 754-9209. Influenza and vaccine information is available from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention at www.cdc.gov/nip.

Simple changes make big savings

Shawn Morris
Public Affairs Staff

How many Soldiers does it take to change a light bulb?

The answer to that question should be, "I'm not sure, but however many it takes, it's worth it."

That's because swapping just one incandescent light bulb for a Compact Fluorescent (CFL) bulb will not only help save the environment, but also save money in the long run.

Such is the idea behind Operation Change Out, a joint effort between the U.S. Department of Defense and Department of Energy that has been ongoing on Fort Dix and across the country since April 2008.

The goal of Operation Change Out is to encourage every serviceman and woman to replace at least one incandescent light bulb with a CFL alternative in each residential unit at participating military installations.

"We're helping to support the federal energy efficiency goals," explained Jennifer Armento, an ecologist with Fort Dix Natural Resources. So far, Fort Dix alone has eliminated the emission of 219,000 pounds of greenhouse gases and saved more than $17,000 in energy costs just by installing more efficient Energy Star-qualified CFL bulbs.

Energy Star is a joint program of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and Department of Energy. The Energy Star label can be found on major appliances, office equipment, home electronics and, of course, CFL bulbs. Some Energy Star-qualified homes may even receive a federal tax credit.

"Change a bulb, make a difference," Armento said. "We've changed all nine in my house."

According to an Operation Change Out press release, switching just one incandescent light bulb to an Energy Star-qualified CFL bulb in every on-base housing unit in the United States would save $7 million over the life of the bulb while preventing the emissions of more than 95-million pounds of carbon dioxide from electricity generators.

(Information to follow on obtaining CFL bulbs from United Communities).

Please note that CFL bulbs contain a small amount of mercury, and should be disposed of properly. Fort Dix residents can (information to follow on post recycling). Local recycling facilities can be located by visiting www.epa.gov/bulbrecycling.

For more information about Operation Change Out and the Energy Star program, visit www.energystar.gov/oco.

Commemoration

"I felt just a smidgen of disbelief," he recounted. "It was surreal, like we were watching a film or something. We just never imagined the Pentagon could be successfully targeted. It was always targeted, we knew that. The Russians had it in their sights. We just didn't believe it would be successfully targeted."

"Our first concern was the folks on the periphery of the crash. They were in shock," Brouillard said. "Because of the heavy smoke, we really couldn't see what had happened, but we were moving people across the street. There was one master ser-giant who had been in the control tower but went to her car for something so she wasn't there when the aircraft struck. She felt so guilty about that."

"All the cell phones were jammed and no one could call out," he recalled. "She couldn't even call her husband, who was also a Soldier at Fort Belvoir, to let him know she was safe."

Obviously fighting emotion, Slowey concentrated on praising the Soldiers and the spirit of America.

"I don't believe any other nation, or its military force, could have met that commitment on that tragic day. It was designed to be a body blow from which we as a nation could not survive," Slowey said in his speech. "However, our adversaries should have studied our history a little closer. Sixty years earlier, we had suffered a similar catastrophic attack on the island of Oahu. And then, just as now, an Army post called Fort Dix sprang into action and prepared an Army for war and ultimate victory."

Following the commander's words, a silent slide show of scenes from 9/11 mixed with photographs of Soldiers vividly recalled the events of that infamous day. Then as Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the USA" played, photographs of Soldiers in theater and scenes from America slowly played.

Brouillard placed placards which were provided on both sides of the sanctuary. These were original artwork from a memorial service held at the Pentagon Sept. 12, 2001. The bulletin and cards handed out were exact replicas of that ceremony's handouts. Remembering the ceremony, Brouillard quoted the speech given by Chap. (Brig. Gen.) James Spivey.

"Today we consecrate new monuments," Spivey said that day. "These also speak — no, they cry out — do not forget, America! Forever remember these whom we honor today. They were all great Americans; they were at their appointed places of duty when our nation was attacked; they courageously refused to abandon their posts; by giving their last full measure of devotion for their country, they honored their pledge to preserve our freedom."

Applying those words to the military members in the chapel, Slowey told them, "You were and are the best of America. You maintained America's commitment to peace for another country while taking on the additional duties and responsibilities to protect our peace here at home."

"We must remember those who lost their lives in those terrorist attacks. We must remember their families, their loved ones, their sons and daughters and friends."

Town Hall agenda

Pothe, who came to Fort Dix during the Kosovo refugee mission when the post was home to 4,000 Kosovars in 1999, echoed the post commander's sentiment that when the military and civilian employees on post take on a mission they do an excellent job.

The first Soldier to be assigned as permanent party on an Air Force base, Pothe said he finds himself visiting Fort Dix and "it is difficult not to have an affinity for the place," he said.

He explained that 26 installations across the United States have been compiled into 12. "We are the first one out of the box. Congress has mandated joint basing and there's no going back," he said.

The merger of three installations occurred as a result of the congressionally mandated Base Realignment and Closure commission action to reap taxpayer cost savings by combining the facilities.

As part of the Town Hall meeting, Fort Dix leaders fielded questions and provided answers. Some of the questions and answers were:

* Question: When the desk at Doughboy Inn was closed in 2003, it impacted Soldiers and their families tremendously. Now, McGuire has scheduled the closure of the front desk at Fort Dix Lodging for the first part of the 2010 fiscal year and there is only one central desk at the McGuire AFB main lodging office. If you are not familiar with the base's lodging office, it is beautiful and new but sits back off the road and is hard to find, especially at night. How do we prepare the Soldiers and their families for this change?

* Response: (Fort Dix Morale, Welfare and Recreation) The lodging signage is actually very good. Guests arriving at either McGuire gate or the passenger terminal should have no problem seeing them. Obviously, prior to closing the Dix reception desk, the signs at the post gates will direct guests to the new desk. Customers will also receive updated information as they make reservations.

As part of the reception consolidation, a lodging shuttle to transport guests between the properties, the passenger terminal, and the visitor's center is expected to be available. The Dix lodging facility is expected to have someone on site who will deal with bad keys and other customer service needs. In addition, we will always have someone at the Dix property who can deal with bad keys and other customer service issues. While it is understandable there may be some initial bumps, primarily for guests who've stayed at Dix before, other bases have done this transition successfully.

* Question: Why is the visitor's center only open Monday to Friday 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.? I feel it should be open at least 12 hours a day and 365 days a year. Also, why do we have a DoD police officer working behind the counter with no administrative support? Seems to me we are wasting an experienced police officer to do work that a clerk should be doing.

* Answer: (Directorate of Public Safety) The visitor's center is only open those hours due to the lack of manpower. The police officers working that detail are being taken out of hide. We have those days and times due to the amount of people we service, and we schedule our officers to cover the most busy customer periods. Police officers are working the visitor's center because they are the only people allowed to sign on to a police system (NCIC) which checks every person coming through the visitor's center. Only police officers can run this system. Also, this is being done for the protection of everyone on Fort Dix.

* Question: What is the status concerning the change to locality pay area? Fort Dix is now in the Philadelphia region; the discussed change in locality pay area would put Fort Dix and McGuire in the New York region, the same as Lakehurst. Some employees are stating that this change will take effect shortly.

* Answer: (Resource Management Office): According to the Courier Post newspaper on Aug. 8, "Rep. John Adler, D-N.J., has been involved in resolving the parity issue since taking office this year. He and the entire congressional delegation from New Jersey have written to President Barack Obama asking him to fill vacancies on the Federal Salary Council, which ultimately will decide the pay parity issue." Also, Congressman Adler's aide said they were notified that Office Personnel Management have received all required information.

Area retirees visit Dix info fair

More than 300 retirees from all services gathered at the Fort Dix Griffith Field House Sept. 12 for the Fort Dix Annual Retiree Appreciation Day festivities to get the latest benefit information offered to the respective veteran community.

The event, hosted by the installation's Human Resources-Military (HRM) Directorate and the Fort Dix Retiree Council, offered individuals and their spouses who served the nation as a career the most current information on benefits and services. It was also a chance to meet old friends and make new ones.

Attendees waited at the door before the 8:30 a.m. opening, but once inside the famous field house they were treated to a continental breakfast donated by the post's Morale, Welfare and Recreation personnel.

"This day is a way of Fort Dix taking the time to remember our veterans and retirees. Many of them, no matter how long ago they retired, are still serving. Specifically, the Fort Dix Retiree Council is one-hundred percent involved in keeping the retiree community informed," Henry Melon-Lopez, the HRM director, said.

In the county fair format, nearly 30 services, agencies and veterans organizations were on hand from providing vehicle decals to gain access to installations to veteran affairs, as well as veteran organizations. A silent auction was also held to provide proceeds for the retiree council.

"I come here every year to get the latest information on my retiree benefits and learn about any changes," said Frank Lepore, a retired Army veteran who attended the event with his wife, Theresa.

After nearly two hours of the retirees visiting the various informational booths and a posting of the colors by Pleasantville High School Junior Officer Training Corps cadets, the attendees received additional information regarding the Fort Dix transition to an Army Support Activity by the post commander, Defense Finance Accounting Service, and Employee Support of the Guard and Reserve, to name a few of the guest speakers.

"We are staying in business," Col. Patrick Slowey, post commander, said. "We are continuing to train the Ultimate Weapon to win the nation's wars."

Slowey explained that the present morale, welfare, and recreation program is being turned over to the joint base and such major activities such as the Fourth of July celebration are still being reviewed.

Other functions that have been provided in the past to retirees are also transitioning to the joint base. One example of the change listed in the Retiree (continued on page 7)

Talent shines at Rising Star event

Highs and lows dominated opening salvos at Club Dix Sept. 11 during Operation Rising Star 2009.

A field of eight contestants sang to a full-house and lots of cheering. Both the Air Force and Army boasted singers hoping to make it to Los Angeles later in the year for a recording session.

Senior Airman Quiana Fuqua, 87th Squadron, Staff Sgt. Jason Knight, 1st Bde., Mid-Atlantic Bn. recruiter, Sgt. 1st Class Eric Turner, Headquarters/Headquarters Company, Mobilization Readiness Bn., Sgt. Christina Kennelly, HHC, 28th Combat Aviation Bde., human resource specialist, and Octaver Robinson, Alisa Piteo, April Dingle, and Monica Casas, wives of Air Force members, all sang a cappella this first round.

The judges brought years of experience in the music field to the table. Judges Sgt. Maj. Rodney Little, 75th Division, Chico Bradley, music director for the Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst, and Angela Starkey, intern with Time Warner, rated each singer giving them feedback on what they liked and what they thought could be improved.

Turner, Kennelly, Robinson, Knight, Piteo, and Dingle won the right to move on and will compete with music accompaniment Sept. 18 at Club Dix.

For the second round, the audience and judges will vote, each contributing 50 percent, to decide the next four winners. Audience members can vote more than once if purchasing food.

Prizes at the local level pay the first place winner $500 and advancement to the Army Wide Finals, $250 for second place and $100 for third place.

The unit providing the most support at the three events will receive a $300 Spirit Award for its show of support toward service members.

"The Mount Olive House of Prayer came and blessed the Fort Dix community showing God's love with praise and worship. We look forward to having them back at a future date."

The guest singers did bring a lot of talent and love of music to the event. Michele Bobien and God's Gems belted out original and modern gospel tunes that brought the audience to its feet. Comes full circle with Joint Base

Barbara still Worthy after 45 years at Fort Dix

Steve Snyder
Public Affairs Staff

Like fine wine or classic literature, Barbara Worthy doesn't get older with age but simply better.

The accountability officer with the Directorate of Logistics Supply and Transportation Division, Worthy will fill essentially the same job slot with the Air Force come October in the Material Management Flight office. But she won't be leaving her office in Bldg. 5320. And she will be completing 46 years of stellar labor on Fort Dix come May 4, 2010.

Worthy's co-workers have benefited from standing on the shoulders of a giant. They aren't bashful about acknowledging their debts to a lady who never stopped charging.

"I remember Barbara back in the early 80s at the Directorate of Engineers when her energy level paralleled Jackie Joyner-Kersey and her attire resembled that of Patty LaBelle," recalls Sheila Thompson-Douglas, traffic management specialist at DOL. "There was no stopping her when it came to work, extracurricular Post activities or helping anyone in need. She strengthened me with her knowledge and softened me with her warm smile," Sheila notes.

Installation Property Book Officer Donna Warren worked with Worthy in the Directorate of Industrial Operations (the forerunner of DOL) when both were keypunch operators and again years later in property accountability. She cherishes the experience.

One of a kind

"Barbara has taught me a lot about my duties in property accountability," confides Warren. "I don't know anybody like Barbara, she is very knowledgeable in her field and always shares her knowledge. She is very funny and extremely kind and knowing her has made my career here on Fort Dix a whole lot better," Warren says.

Born in Lakewood on Dec. 3, 1937, Barbara graduated from high school there in 1955. She was a shorthand and typing wiz and also very adept on softball diamonds.

Barbara had an early contact with Camp Dix, too. She remembers visiting her Dad, a World War II vet, when he was living in a tent on what was then called Camp Dix when she was about five years old.

Barbara married shortly after high school but connubial bliss eluded her. In 1963 the mother of three children decided to improve her family's lot by enrolling in "Pierce College in Philadelphia, taking up computer programming and systems analysis for a year." The education payed dividends, enabling Barbara to find employment with the Internal Revenue Service on Roosevelt Avenue in Philly.

Leaving IRS for Dix

But city life didn't appeal. Barbara wanted to escape the crime and grime and did so by entering the Fort Dix workforce at the Civilian Personnel Office in 1964. Beginning as a key punch operator, Barbara taught the skill to other employees from 1965 to 1972.

"I loved reading cards," she says.

In 1972 Barbara became a supply clerk with the Directorate of Public Works (DPW). "We went from stubby pencils to computers, from crayons to computers," she laughingly recalls.

In 1980 she worked at Central Issue Facility for three years under Jerry Trotto before moving back to DPW to work with Tom Lynn in 1984 and landing in her current position in 2004.

Saving children

Barbara has always been big on "save the children" programs and concentrated on forming military drill teams featuring teens and youngsters in the Lakewood area. Working with a friend, Howard Macer, a former Marine now deceased, Barbara formed the Royal Counts, Royalettes and Jr. Royalettes, giving young men and women the opportunity to stay off the streets and do something constructive.

Worthy and Macer took the teams around the state and their drill squads received national recognition in the 1970s and 80s. Worried about today's youth,

Soldier lauded for service to women's rehab facility

Shawn Morris
Public Affairs Staff

One Army Reserve Soldier who has taken the Army Value of selfless service to new heights received the Military Outstanding Volunteer Service Medal (MOVSM) during a ceremony held at the Fort Dix Intermediate Level Training (ILE) facility Sept. 11.

Lt. Col. Angela Woods, a reserve ILE instructor with 11th Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 104th Division (Institutional Training), earned the award by volunteering countless hours during the past four years at Re-Entry Ministry, a rehabilitation home for women addicted to drugs and alcohol.

"When I can be there, and when I can help out, I'm there," said Woods, who works as the associate director for training development for Generations Plus/Northern Manhattan Health Network in civilian life. "We each have something to give."

Woods had much to give in the way of computer savvy and leadership experience, helping to develop Re-Entry Ministry's mission statement, business plan, and Web site, among other accomplishments.

"To be able to take that (knowledge and experience) and give that to them, that was the most rewarding thing," she said. Woods first got involved with Re-Entry upon her return from a tour in Iraq in 2005.

"In the military, you're kind of a public servant already," she said. "I'm grateful for my experience in Iraq."

The folks at Re-Entry Ministry were also grateful for Woods' volunteer service, writing a three-page document that led to her receiving the MOVSM.

"The organization is much, much better off for her work," said Lt. Col. Brian Miller, a fellow ILE instructor with the 11th Battalion who deployed with Woods to Iraq from 2004 to 2005.

Re-Entry Ministry, which has rehabilitated more than 250 women in the past 25 years, continues to benefit from Woods' work, but she gives all the credit to those who work day in and day out helping women in need.

"I couldn't do what they do on a daily basis," she admitted.

"These people give so much more than I'm giving — they should be getting the awards."

"To be part of that really humbles you," she added.

More information on Re-Entry Ministry can be found by visiting the Website, www.reentryministry.org.

audience to sing with her, broke her singing to praise God, then went right back to singing without missing a beat.

"I loved it here. Everyone is so nice. I hope we can come back again," Bobien said of the welcome the musicians, congregants and leaders of Fort Dix Chapel offered to the guests.

The musicians, a mix from Fort Dix and the Mount Olive House of Prayer, Tabernacle of Purpose, were skilled in rolling with Bobien.

They deftly managed to change keys, fill pauses where she was talking instead of singing and started with her as if by telepathy when she began singing again.

Rosie Mendoza sang quieter songs, more low-key and bluesy, and then shifted into a fast-paced song she made into a round with the backup singers and the audience.

Her sultry voice was better suited to the quieter tunes, but she was able to hold her own when the pace picked up.

After cooking all day, Carter presented a feast to satisfy any appetite.

From sliced beef to fried chicken and all the trimmings, there wasn't a body who wasn't satisfied and who didn't find room for the sheet cake that polished off the evening.

Jewish holidays to be celebrated on installation

Ryan Morton
Public Affairs Staff

Sundown, Sept. 18, marks the beginning of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year and first of what are known in the Jewish faith as the High Holy Days.

Rosh Hashanah is commonly known as the "Day of Judgment" and is observed on the first day of Tishrei, the seventh month of the Hebrew calendar. It is also observed as a day of rest and activities that are prohibited in Jewish law for the holiday Shabbat are also prohibited on Rosh Hashanah.

This time also marks the beginning of what are known as the "Ten Days of Repentance," which includes Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur, the most solemn and important of all Jewish holidays, and the days in between the two holidays.

During this time, it is custom for Jews to sit down and have a traditional Rosh Hashanah dinner, attend services, meditate, and ask for forgiveness from anyone they've wronged over the last year.

According to Jewish law, judgment on each individual is pronounced on Rosh Hashanah, but is not made absolute until Yom Kippur, known as the Day of Atonement.

The days in between are registered and used as an opportunity to mend one's ways to pronounce or alter judgment in one's favor. Many Jews from around the world attend services at temples and synagogues at various times during these days and an instrument made out of a ram's horn called a shofar is blown. The blowing of the shofar is intended to awaken the listener from his or her "slumber" and alert them to coming judgment.

By tradition, God inscribes each person's fate for the coming year into a "book" on Rosh Hashanah and waits until Yom Kippur to "seal" the verdict. During the days of repentance, a Jew tries to amend his or her behavior or ways and seek forgiveness for wrongs done against God and other human beings.

Yom Kippur is then set aside for public and private petitions and confessions of guilt, and at the conclusion, one is considered absolved by God.

Yom Kippur comes at sundown Sept. 27 and goes until nightfall the following day, lasting approximately 25 hours.

Traditionally, Jews fast throughout the day and attend prayer services. Also, many Jews hold a break-the-fast at friends' homes to officially renounce.

McGuire Air Force Base will host Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur services at the Community Center on East Arnold Avenue, across the street from Chapel One, starting Friday, Sept. 18, at 6:50 p.m. Services will also be held on Saturday, Sept. 19, at 9 a.m.; 6:40 p.m., and 7:40 p.m.

Additional services will be held Sunday, Sept. 20, at 9 a.m., 6:40 p.m., and 7:55 p.m. On Sunday, Sept. 27, at 6:35 p.m. and Monday, Sept. 28, at 9 a.m. and 5:15 p.m. the High Holy Days will also be observed.

Airmen graduate Leadership School

Congratulations to the following Airmen for graduating from Airman Leadership School Class 09-F. The development of Airman Leadership School, and all professional military education, is based upon the premise that the Air Force needs efficient leadership at all levels. ALS is the first phase of an ongoing three-phase PME program designed to gain that leadership. McGuire's ALS is a 24-day, 192-hour course which focuses on preparing senior airmen to accept greater responsibilities as supervisors and rating officials.

Greater stability needed, Reserve chief says

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

ROCHESTER, N.Y., Sept. 15, 2009 — As the Army draws down in Iraq and focuses increasingly on Afghanistan, the Army Reserve chief said he's preparing his troops for the demands likely to be made of them -- and urging Army leadership to give them the predictability their dual Citizen-Soldier lives demand.

"We have to be very careful that we don't jerk reserve soldiers around," Army Lt. Gen. Jack C. Stultz told American Forces Press Service, adding that he's been adamant in reminding Army leadership about that.

Because they have obligations to their civilian employers as well as the military, reservists can't be asked to do abrupt about-faces without sufficient planning time, Stultz said, whether it's dedicating them to a deployment or making a mission change.

Ideally, Stultz said, deploying units should know when and where they are going, and what mission they'll be conducting, six months out.

"In other words, don't have me put a unit in place, getting ready to go to Iraq, and at the last minute say, 'No, we don't need them,' and turn them off," he said. "Those soldiers are preparing their civilian lives, their jobs, their apartment leases, etc. You have to be very careful as you look out ahead and say, 'If we look like we are going to off-ramp a unit, you've got plenty of time to let them know, to get their lives together.'"

"Likewise," he continued, "don't off-ramp them for Iraq and then a month later on-ramp them for Afghanistan. Let's be smart enough to say, 'If we are not going to need this capability here, do we need it somewhere else?'"

Whenever he meets with Army reservists, whether state-side or in the combat theater, Stultz said he cautions them not to assume the drawdown in Iraq will have an immediate impact on them.

"I don't want to set false expectations," he said.

Army reservists will continue to have an important mission in Iraq, even as combat forces draw down, he said. "We are the enablers, the combat support and service support forces," he said. "We are always the last to go out."

"So even if you have a draw-down of forces in Iraq, you are going to have to have some kind of force there to draw it down. And you are going to have some kind of force there to maintain a footprint for what is going behind," he said. "So that is going to be the enablers."

Similarly, Stultz said, Army reservists will have a key responsibility for supporting any force buildup in Afghanistan.

"One of the first requirements you have is for the enablers to get in there and establish the footprint for the combat forces to fall in on," he said.

Stultz was here for the Sept. 12 ribbon cutting of a new Army Strong Community Center to serve reserve-component as well as active-duty families who don't live near a major military installation. The center, the first of what Stultz said he hopes will be many community-based "virtual installations," will support families he calls critical to Reserve soldiers' readiness.

opportunity to highlight the role not only families, but also communities and employers, play in the Army Reserve's success.

The military signed a community covenant with the city of Rochester to galvanize community support.

Stultz also welcomed two new members into the Army Reserve's Employer Partnership Initiative, which helps the Army Reserve and civilian employers share the same skilled work force. The Builders Exchange of Rochester and Monroe County Sheriff's Department both signed on to the program, joining more than 500 other employers around the country now participating.

Stultz said he's been amazed by the "overwhelming" response to the employer partnership. More employers who learn about the program contact the Army Reserve every week, asking how they, too, can tap into the skills Army reservists offer, he said.

"It's kind of like the perfect storm," Stultz said of bringing together Reserve soldiers, their families, local employers and community leaders in a single event.

"We did the community covenant signing, so the community said, 'We're here for you.' We cut the ribbon on the Army Strong Community Center that says, 'Here is where the community can plug in [and provide support].'"

Meanwhile, the ribbon cutting demonstrated to families that the military is going to take care of them, and to reservists that if they're deployed, they know their families have that support system in place, he said.

"What a great day for the Army," he said.

FCI captures softball championship

Behind a two-home run effort from Jack Balmer, FCI captured the 2009 Fort Dix Intramural Softball championship with a 10-6 victory over Free Agents Sept. 9.

This is the third consecutive year these two teams have met in the championship round with FCI winning each of those years.

According to Chris O'Donnell, the Fort Dix sports coordinator, the competition between these teams and around the league as a whole has been top-of-the-line.

"This was the best season yet. We had more teams, there was more competition, and it's been a lot of fun," said O'Donnell.

For Free Agents, they still feel good about their season and what they've accomplished.

"We had a great season. It was very successful," said Edwin Gonzalez, Free Agents, who had two in-the-park home runs.

"We have great chemistry and attitude. Everybody picks each other up and we really enjoy the team we have. There's good support. We always feel confident, but just came up a little short," he said.

The majority of each team looks to be returning next season with it being presumably a more competitive league with Fort Dix and McGuire Air Force Base combining as part of the joint-base merger.

"We anticipate next year having double the teams with even better competition and more fun," said O'Donnell.

(Editor's note: Free Agents had different team names the past two years. Last year they were City Coffee and in 2007 they were the Steele Angels.)
